February 14

Aka Library Lover's Day

Library Lovers' Day, is an international event dedicated to honoring libraries, librarians, and the community's love for reading. It is celebrated annually on February 14, what better day to honor loving books. Originating in 2006, this day promotes the invaluable role libraries play in providing access to information, fostering a love for learning, and serving as community hubs. This initiative was started by the State Library of New South Wales and is supported by the Australian Library and Information Association (ALIA) and library organizations around the world. While Valentine's Day focuses on romantic love, Library Lovers' Day provides an opportunity to share love for libraries, which are often considered cherished community spaces. Stop by and visit your local library, check out all the great things that are available to your community.
